Seville Cor. Philadelphia Press.
Sad, dry, desolate, wind-swept, bare, almost treeless, cold in Winter and fiercely hot in Summer—such is the plateau of Central Spain. Melancholy, ill-cultivated pastures, with iminense flocks of sheep, guarded by shepherds clad in sheep-skin cloaks, are the most frequent pictures of the Castilian plains. Crossing the Sierra Morena, you come to another plateau, the Manchia, celebrated because it was the home of the noble knight Don Quixote and of his faithful follower, Sancho Panza. The Mancha is more fertile; oranges, lemons, olives, the grape, fields of wheat and maize meet you on every side. When you come to the Guadaquiver you feel that, you have indeed reached the sunny South. Palm trees raise their proud crowns, Moorish towns and Moorish types predominate. But the glory of the Moorish deminion has fallen into ruins; their learning, their science to-day is ignorance and treachery. Still farther south rises the folty wall of the Sierra Nevada, covered with eternal snow, and the coast line beyond these mountains is African in

The originators, ten in number, assumed the name of the "Black Hand," their deeds has been slowly and sliently growing, and what was first but a small band has suddenly as uned colossal proportions. The originators, ten in number, assumed the mame of the "Black Hand," their deeds were to be done swiftly and at night. These original ten members were men of culture, whose pleadings in favor of their oppressed brethern the law ignored; then they decided to try self-help, in order to relieve their homes from a tyranical yoke. They chose, each of them, ten resolute men, who were to be known as members of the band only among themselves, but to remain unknown to the rest; these received their orders directly from their immediate chief; they were unacquainted with the names of all the other conspirators. Thus, should a traitor be among them, he could never betray more than ten who formed his division. The numerical law is known to all, and each in his turn is free to constitute himself the leader of ten new adherents. To-day no one knows how many thousand are actually members of the "Black Hand," but that there are tens of thousands there is no doubt.

The power has escaped from the hands have also been committed, and the "Black Hand" established a reign of terror over the community. Houses have been plund-ered, mail coaches robbed, thousands of head of cattle stolen, and all who have dared to oppose them in their operations have forfeited their lives for their daring. But the members of this murderous band are soon to have dealt out to them the jus-tice which they failed to give others. One by one the police have succeeded in cap-turing them, until there are now fully one-thousand behind prison bars. The incar-ceration of these bandits has done more than anything else to show the actual than anything else to show the actual strength of the band, and the vast number of sympathizers it had enlisted in the case. Every day there are fresh arrivals of food, clothing and letters for the prisoners, and the prisoners are surrounded by mobs of their friends. No one is allowed inside the prisoners are surrounded by mobs of their friends. No one is allowed inside the walls though, and the men are not permitted to have any communication with the outside world. "The Black Hand" has branched off far into the North, and in its Southward course it has reached the shores of the Mediteranean Sea; it will probably be impossible ever to trace it fully.

It is expected that the authorities will commence proceedings sgainst the men within the next two weeks. Premier Sagasta has been the leading spirit in the prosecution, and it is, perhaps, due more to him than any one else, that such a large number of the bands have been captored. Each of the 100 or more prisoners has been indicted separately, for one, two, three and sometimes more crimes, and their sentences will vary with the enormity of the offense. There is no doubt but what they will be convicted, for they don't hesitate to acknowledge their career and occupation, or, rather, want of occupation.

One of Quantrell's Men.

New York Tribune.

One of the first to- join Quantrell's guerilla hand was William Moore, then living in Lafayette county, Mo., whosoon became an expert desperado and who accomplished his full share of the bloody outrages which made his companions and himself infamous. After the war had ended he engaged in various enterprises of fraud, inst and murder, made money and lost it again, took his turn in jail, and finally, after many desperate rights studes, began life over again as a cowboy in Colorado. Thence, having saved a little money, he migrated to New Mexico and started a sheep ranch, which has prospered wonderfully. He is now rich, and trying, with more success than could have been expectad, to be respectable. At the present moment he is under the care of an occuliat in Kansas City, intending if his vision is restored to marry a young woman whois said to be studying elocution in this city at his expense.
